

BECOMING A NON-RESIDENT IMPORTER

Simplifying exporting to Canada

A Non-Resident Importer (NRI) is a company that does not have a presence in Canada, yet imports into Canada from another country and assumes responsibility for the transaction.

By taking complete accountability to deliver the product to the buyer's door, the NRI provides an efficient and cost effective experience for Canadian customers.

Are you eligible to become a NRI?

U.S. companies that make export sales to Canadian consumers, retailers and businesses can become Non-Resident Importers. The best way to register as a NRI is through a customs broker.

Top 4 Benefits to becoming an NRI

- 1 Access to Canadian Market
Gain a competitive advantage by accessing the benefits of the Canadian market without the expense of a Canadian location.
- 2 Simplified Pricing
Provide clearer pricing to customers in Canada by offering products in Canadian dollars and eliminating their need to pay duties and exchange.
- 3 Better Customer Experience
Simplify purchasing for your customers and eliminate the need for customers to be involved in the process of importing.
- 4 Shipment Control Improved
Control over the process of moving goods to Canada is simplified for the importer and the potential for delays is minimized.
